

Published based on A Few Ideas For Gifts For Dad

A Few Ideas For Gifts For Dad

Christmas can be a difficult period, especially if you're not sure what to buy for the people close to you. For a lot of people, dads can be the hardest to buy for, and you don't want to take the easy option and just opt for a new tie. So to help you with some gifts for him this Xmas, here are a handful of ideas

Alcohol can often be a good option, but you shouldn't just buy any cheap bottle of rum from your local off-license. Spend some time looking around online or in specialist shops and find an old variety that's extremely well presented. Not only will your dad notice the extra effort, he'll probably want to save the bottle for a particularly special occasion, meaning it will be around for a while.

Don't overlook how well received personalised gifts can be, just stay away from the more predictable choices. Don't bother with a 'worlds best dad' t-shirt but you could get a childhood photo of his blown up and framed, which is much more thoughtful. It shows an extra level of thought and will be much better received than a pair of socks you picked up on the way home.

Most dads love gadgets, so something that makes their life easier will probably go down well. If you've got the money, a big screen projector for him to enjoy the football is certain to be a good choice. If you're looking for something not quite so expensive, try one of those instant tea makers that give you a cups worth of boiling water in ten seconds. Anything that relates to making a cup of tea quicker or more easily will usually hit the mark!

Hopefully that will have given you a few good ideas for gifts for your dad for Christmas, so you'll actually be able to get him something he likes this year.

You can also find this article published on A Few Ideas For Gifts For Dad, and on the tag pages childhood photo, dad, gifts, lot, pair of socks, projecter.